5cm, so you know he's Korean) appears more Hollywood-in-America than the rest of his compatriots in the Philippines. He also sports a moustache. The Last Dinosaurs This feature-length, one-shot animated short from Studio 4°C was created by four-time Academy Award winner and animator Masaaki Yuasa, who is also the director and co-writer of the Wreck-It Ralph franchise. His latest project, Boogiepop and Others, was nominated for a 2013 Academy Award for Best Animated Feature Film. His earlier work includes the Ghost in the Shell, Paranoia Agent, and Millennium Actress series, as well as the 2014 remake of Akira. With no further ado, here are the trailers for "The Last Dinosaur" and "The Last Dinosaur 2." The first trailer is short, sweet, and spooky, with some less-than-subtle symbolism. We get a quick peek of the main character, and the nervous youth who is the title's protagonist. We also get to see some of the film's Japanese voice acting. The second trailer is longer than the first, and features a bit more of the titular Last Dinosaur's backstory, but we see little of this character beyond his menacing stare. There's also some more Japanese voice acting. The Last Dinosaur originally premiered in Japan on June 26. The English version of the film is still scheduled to premiere in Japan this October. The anime will be released as a limited-edition Blu-ray/DVD on November 19, and those who want to own it can pre-order it now for $45.
